I mean, there should be millions of key-fobs lost on the ground every year in the United States alone. And yet we don't lose millions of vehicles over the years. We lose 100,000 or so a year. All of these vehicles are found intact. The typical auto crime in the United States is 35miles. When you include crime on ships, planes, trains and other vehicles, we're talking about billions of dollars a year. There are so many ways we could lose our wealth. Illegal immigration is one, piracy is another, identity theft is another, and of course vehicle theft is another. Vehicle insurance is skyrocketing and being forced onto young drivers, who of course are inexperienced, many times accident-prone, and a great tipp to speed. All of these problems are caused by bad actors, mostly criminals, but additionally bad actors from foreign nationals, usually in countries other than the U.S. It's only in this country that we have the luxury of being so easily robbed, or, to look at it differently, it's only in this country that we don't really care that much. If we did care, we'd do something about it. Instead, we look at these flaws and say, "Well, that's life." and we just grow used to it. And sometimes, when a new problem arises, we just look the other way and say, "Well, that's too bad." But it's not too bad. It's actually kind of wonderful. It's not too bad. And the reason f678ea9f9e
